Latest regulation

Ü Zeichen remains mandatory till 15th October, 2016

europa.eu

After the official ruling of the European Court of Justice, the Ü sign, which has been the mandatory certification for permitting building products to be sold in Germany, will expire on 15th October 2016. However, before a new legal scheme is applied, the Ü sign remains a mandatory certificate.

Meanwhile, the Ministry of Transport, Building and Urban Affairs of Germany and the DIBT (the German Institute of Building Technology) are working together to develop a new regulation scheme in line with the European legislation. For innovative products with no Ü sign and products with expiring Ü sign, there will be not legal access to the German market. For application of the daughter Ü certificates from a still valid mother certificate, there is a grace period till 31st of January 2016.

In order to guarantee our customers the German market access and to minimize the bureaucratic impact on the businesses, Novalis started the Ü sign accreditation process in time and has gained two Ü certificates for the dry back, clic and loose lay products. Because all our certificates have the validity till 2020. They will be recognised and translated by the new scheme. In another words, the new EU court ruling will not impact our business too much.
